Tech Info Library

Macintosh: Connections Software from Concentrix

```
Revised:        7/24/91
Security:       Everyone

Macintosh: Connections Software from Concentrix

======================================================================

Article Created: 30 May 1991
Article Last Reviewed:
Article Last Updated:

TOPIC -------------------------------------------------------------

This article describes Connections™ software for the Macintosh.

DISCUSSION --------------------------------------------------------

Connections software, from Concentrix Technology, Inc. consists of applications such as personal calendaring, to-do lists, a telephone directory, call tracker, daily accomplishments journal, and text information organizer.  It provides an interface to IBM PROFS electronic mail and group calendaring.

Many of the functions of PROFS calendaring and electronic mail can be done off line, including archiving, organizing, and searching e-mail messages. If the mainframe or network goes down, the user still has access to the calendar and previously read e-mail messages.  Mail messages can also be created off line and sent from Connections' out basket.

Connections offers slots for additional modules that can be created with other third-party connectivity tools, such as MitemView or SQL/DAL add-ons.

Connections can be modified in HyperCard.

The address and phone number of Concentrix Technology, Inc. are in a separate article in the Tech Info Library.

Copyright 1991, Apple Computer, Inc.

Tech Info Library Article Number:7435
```